EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

The Salution of the Negro Freblem-A Good Time Coming. We confess that in spite of the prescience which the editorial profession gives to even the merest tyre who takes up the lead-pencil, we have not been able to see clearly the end the negro problem, as our neighbor, the Gazette, calin it. We have seen various proects for taking the slavery question out of offices, even the last one of our Bell-Everett riends, of sticking their heads in the sand and calling the slavery agitation settled, unconscious of the very extensive posterior mestion was taken out of politics in the Kansas organization, and the country had what our camp-meeting brothers would call refreshing season over it. These plans seem to have resulted thus far in taking the inventors out of politics, and at this time the great pacificator of slavery agitation finds it necessary to catch at drift-wood, straws, bubbles, or any thing within reach, to combine a raft; to keep his head above

Our Republican friends have found it convenient to retreat from their positive declar ation of the means by which they would solve the slavery question, by excluding it from the Territories by Congressional legislation, and to fall back on the general principle that all men are free and equal-a very valuable principle, which is almost as pertinent to the purpose as if they had resolved that all men are brothers. But we have much consideration for them, for the principles of a party which will not permit the negro to be a slave, nor allow him the rights of a free man, and which has no place for the negro but a state of betweenity, like Mahomet's coffin, are not easily defined.

The plan of stopping the slavery agita-tion by an appeal to "inexorable logic," is perhaps the most promising; that is, to encourage slavery into the Territories by constitutional protection, and when it has been well baited, and has vested large rights under the Constitution of the United States, to spring on it the dead fall of a State Constitution and abolish it, if there happens then to be a popular majority against this kind of property. This is the mild remedy of taking slavery out of political agitation and settling it by civil war.

In all these we had not seen a satisfactory solution of the slavery question, until the Gorette of Wednesday announced one. It is not Republicanism, nor philanthropy, nor Providence; but production. Alast for the true faith In this city, when the Gazette, its ancient defender, lets go its hold on the breeching, loses its confidence in Providence. and seizes on production. Here it is:

and seizes on production. Here it is:

"Looking, then, to the future, we say that if cotton be a necessity of civilization, then it must be raised in Africa. The capacity of our present body of negroes is now reached. They can no longer produce more than the present quantity with the notured increase, if more cotton is to be raised, it must be raised in Africa. The world has proved one thing in commerce: The cheeper production prevails. Cotton can be raised in Africa by negro labor for two cents per pound. It can not be raised in the United States for double that. Hence the negro must return to the not be raised in the United States for double that. Hence the negro must return to the land where both he and the cotton plant are natices. There is just the alternative to take him there voluntarily, or to let the price of a slave depreciate till no body will keep him. This is the only peaceful solution for the negro problem. All else involves war, blood and convulvion. and convulsion.

The thing is up! Tuppence a pound has done it. Is it not singular that all our great revolutions turn on tuppences? Tuppence a pound on tea caused the revolution; and now tuppenny cotton is going to carry all our slaves back to old Africa's shore; or if the owner does not "take him there voluntarily," the only alternative will be "to let the price of a slave depreciate till nobody will keep him." Is it not strange that the South can go on buying, raising, and begetsouth can go on thying, raising, and togetting negroes, when the price of them is to be collapsed by this tuppenny African cotton? Is it not strange that, as Pharaoh did, after his heart had been divinely hardened, not to let the Children of Israel go, and divinely softened by a disciplinary course of frogs, blood, bugs, murrain, lice, and death of all the first hours to let them so, the South do the first-born, to let them go, the South do not rise up early in the morning and thrust out the negro, for his own land, even if they have to lend him all their jewels and raiment to get him off, as the Egyptians did the Hebrews? In all 19 do. But "'twas ever thus," the South go on buying negroes at $1,500 aplece, and marrying and giving them in marriage, after their sort, and improving the breed by judicious crossing, and raising ten-cent cotton and getting rich, in spite of the warning of the Gazette, that their slave property is all des-tined to an inevitable collapse, just as the people of the whole earth went on marrying and giving in marriage, and scoffing at old Noah pegging away for a hundred years at his ark, and at his well-disciplined caravan, and declaring that it was not much of a shower, until the water was up to their

There might have been some excuse for the world then, for in the lack of daily newspapers, and of all the modern improvements for communicating intelligence, Noah's warning could have reached but a minute portion of the earth, although all went under, all the same; but there is no such excuse for the South now, since the warning is published in the Gazette, and especially since we have—to use a metropolitan phrase— "given it the benefit of our circulation."

The Gazette puts in a slight proviso, in its "solution" "If cotton be a necessity for civilization." If? Why, what are we to do? What article can supply its place? Are we to go back to fig-leaf aprons, as Mother Eve did when she plucked the wrong fruit? Then how shall we protect ourselves from that which General Scott was so careful to fortify against !- a fire in the rear. Or are we to clothe ourselves in "coats of skins," such as we are told in the same history "the Lord God made for Adam and Eve?" Surely that would not be civilization, now. Then, there is the lack in female development, which Solomon, in the Canticles, so feelingly lamented and sought to remedy, in the "little sister," all of which difficulty and anxiety sister," all of which difficulty and antiety of mind is now removed by cotton. Will the Gazette say that this is not a necessity of civilization? Will it set up its opinion against Solemen's wisdom and experience?

The only weak spot which we can discover in the Gazette "solution," is the statement that "the capacity of our present body of aegron is now reached. They can no longer personne more than the present quantity with the natural increase. If more cotting away three glast recovering the Gazette "solution," is the statement of the line of the lin

Africa." Has the natural increase of the be raised it must be raised in Africa?" It is generally thought that the natural increase is going on pretty lively. If we take the ratio of increase of the cotton produced during the last twenty years, by the same body of negroes, "with their natural increase," and apply it to the future, we may find that it will make considerable more cotton than the present quantity. What is to stop it? Slaves propagate faster than free laborers; much faster than free negroes in this country. So that, really, in the productive aspect of the case, slavery will beat freedom, in a long race. This, to theologians of the Gazette school, who hold that to increase and multiply is the chief end of man, prove slavery to be the "normal condition" of the human race.

If we are to wait for "the peaceful solu-tion of the negro problem" until the natural increase of the negroes stops, or until Africa produces cotton at two cents a pound, to supply the world, or until the price of $1,500 slaves depreciates till no body will keep them, we think the solution will be ushered in with the millerium or prehams with the in with the millenium, or perhaps with the second advent of the devil; but it is not the less edifying to see the devout resignation of the Gazette to the providence of "produc-

Singular Fire.—Yesterday morning at ten o'clock a fire of an uncommon kind occurred in the middle of the street, at the corner of Ninth and Main. One of Johnson's light Daguerreian cars was standing near the entrance to his gallery, receiving a large supply of stock for a trip to the South. The operators and driver had just completed the packing of every thing very carefully for a long journey, and were bidding farewell to their fellow-operators of the gallery, when the horse, a spirited animal, took fright at something passing, and ran off with the wagon. The great excitement, which was of course the result in that crowded thoroughfare, was very soon increased by the wagon upsetting; but much more so when a body of dense smoke and flames was seen making its way out of the front door. The commendable activity and intelligence of a crowd of neighbors, to whom Mr. Johnson owes many thanks, soon brought a good supply of water, and nothing but a good supply of water, and nothing but a good supply would have been sufficient, as the flames were fed by several bottles of ether, alcohol, benzine and varnishes. The fire was extinguished in a quarter of an hour but the cause of it is succommon. There had been so light or fire used in the wagon. It is supposed that some match ignited by friction and set fire to the inflammable contents of some of the broken bottles. Mr. Johnson's loss by fire and water we understand to be not more than $150.

FENCE-WEAVER PATENTED MAY 17, 1809.

What Every Landholder Should Have.

THIS SIMPLE YET INGENIOUS MAOHINE I justly pronounced one of the wonderful inventions of this prolific age.

It is capable of weaving 156 feet of fence per hour. It can be readily worked by sither one or two hands. Both time and labor are saved.

The fence when made and put up will cost fifty per cent. less than the ordinary plank fence, and is equally durable.

It will make twenty times more fencing from the same quantity of timber than the usual rail mode. Timber otherwise considered useless for feacing purposes, can be worked in and saved.

The fence can be made in detached portions if desired, and, when completed, shipped to any place. It is a cheep, strong and durable fence for yard and garden, orchard and field.

The machine, and social makes for the fence, are now on exhibition at the Medicon House, No. 19 Mainstreet, in this city. State and County Rights for sale by a Right. ITS ADVANTAGES;
